When I purchased my first Dingo in the February of 1998, I hoped that it would perform all of the tasks as easily as what the salesman had demonstrated. Two years on and I have had so much success with Dingo that I now have 5 machines and a wide range of attachments. Our Dingoes can take a lot of the credit for the increase seen in our revenue base in the last 2 years.

Customers want to be able to hire the best and come back time and again with nothing but positive feedback after hiring a Dingo. It is operator friendly, down time is virtually non-existent, and my maintenance staff rarely need to do any more than wash and refuel the Dingo to get it ready for its next hire.

Dingo Mini Diggers have also always given us great after sales service. Being in the hire industry we rely heavily on our suppliers for emergency spare parts and advice, the staff at Dingo has never once let me down. Their product knowledge and understanding of the hire industry and its needs have helped my company to benefit.

For a hire company to succeed in today's market it needs to be able to change with the times. The versatility of having a Dingo in your hire fleet - trencher, rotary hoe, posthole digger, bucket -, combined with its easiness to use and to transport, is the secret to the Dingoes success in the hire industry.

If your company is contemplating purchasing a Dingo, believe me, what you see is what you get, there are no gimmicks, just a dam good machine.
